Good morning, Ms. Gregory

I am following up on the below correspondence. Our preference is to resolve this matter of copyright infringement amicably through settlement discussions. Our client's photo appeared on the Vegas Food & Fun website apparently without a license.

Please advise if we can work to resolve this.

Regards,

Ms. Gregory,

We appreciate your correspondence in providing clarity to the situation. Unfortunately, the fact that the photograph was pulled from an official Facebook page for Circus Circus does not grant Vegas Food & Fun a license for use of our client's photograph. Thus, the matter constitutes copyright infringement. To resolve this matter amicably and pre-suit, I suggest that we proceed with settlement discussions.

While I cannot provide legal advice, I would encourage you to discuss the matter with an attorney, who is hopefully family or a friend (so you don't have to unnecessarily incur legal fees) and get a sense of what the potential liability is. Alternatively, you may consult (if available) with your General Liability Insurance for potential coverage of this matter. I'm happy to discuss, but please keep in mind that my client does not consider this matter closed. I am trying to guide the process to a peaceful resolution.

Thank you,

Mr Rodriguez,

We do not have a contractual relationship with Circus Circus, but we only pull what they represented to be official images from their website or official Facebook page.

Hello, Ms. Gregory

Thank you for providing the link below. I will reach out to Circus Circus (CC) regarding the link you provided. While I draft a follow up, can you please help clarify the relationship between Vegas Food & Fun and Circus Circus? I have some questions regarding the use of the photograph.

Is there a contractual relationship/express permission from Circus Circus for the use of photographs on their websites?

If photographs are otherwise selected on the presumption of CC's ownership, it appears Circus Circus's use of the photograph, and any subsequent uses, constitute infringement of our client's copyright.

Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns.

Regards,

Hello,

I have removed the image from our site, and looked back to see why we would have this photo. We only source photos from Shutterstock, Bigstock, and the official websites and pages of the company we are promoting. We never just take images from Google or other websites.

Circus Circus used this photo on their Facebook page back in 2013, representing that it was their image here, which is where we got it. We thought it was an official Circus Circus image.

I apologize for the misunderstanding.

Thank you,
